Jack and the Beanstalk

starring Mattan

Beanstalk Storybook

Jack and the Beanstalk, starring Mattan

Copyright © 2026 Beanstalk Storybook (Mattan Jackier). All rights reserved.
Published by Beanstalk Storybook (Mattan Jackier), beanstalk.jackier.xyz
Personalized edition made for Mattan on November 13, 2026.

Adapted from the traditional folk tale. Illustrations made with AI from a photo shared by the family, for this one book.
No part of this book may be reproduced, stored or shared without written permission from the publisher.
First edition. Printed on demand.

Once upon a time, Jack lived with his mother in a tiny cottage at the edge of the fields. They were very poor.

One morning the cupboard was bare. “We must sell Milky-White,” said his mother. “She gives no more milk.”

So Jack tied a rope to Milky-White and set off down the long, winding road to market.

On the way, he met a strange little old man with a twinkle in his eye.
“Good morning, Jack,” he said.

“Trade me your cow,” said the old man, “and I will give you five magic beans.”

Magic beans! Jack could not say no. He handed over the rope and ran all the way home.

“Beans?” cried his mother. “You sold our cow for beans?” And she threw them out of the window.

That night Jack went to bed without any supper, feeling very sorry for himself.

But in the morning his little room was full of green light. Outside, a giant beanstalk had grown up into the sky!

Jack climbed out of the window and up, up, up the beanstalk, until the cottage was a speck far below.

At the very top, a long white road ran across the clouds to an enormous castle.

A giant woman opened the door. “Hide, quickly!” she whispered. “My husband is coming, and he is always grumpy before breakfast.”

THUMP! THUMP! In stomped the giant. “Fee-fi-fo-fum!” he roared. “I smell a little one!”

After breakfast the giant set a little brown hen on the table. “Lay!” he said, and she laid an egg of solid gold.

Soon the giant was snoring like thunder. Jack crept out, scooped up the hen, and tiptoed to the door.

On the shelf, the golden harp cried out, “Master! Master!” The giant woke with a roar and came thundering after Jack.

Down the beanstalk Jack slid, with the hen tucked under his arm and the giant's great boots coming after him.

“Mother, the axe!” shouted Jack. Chop! Chop! Chop! He swung with all his might.

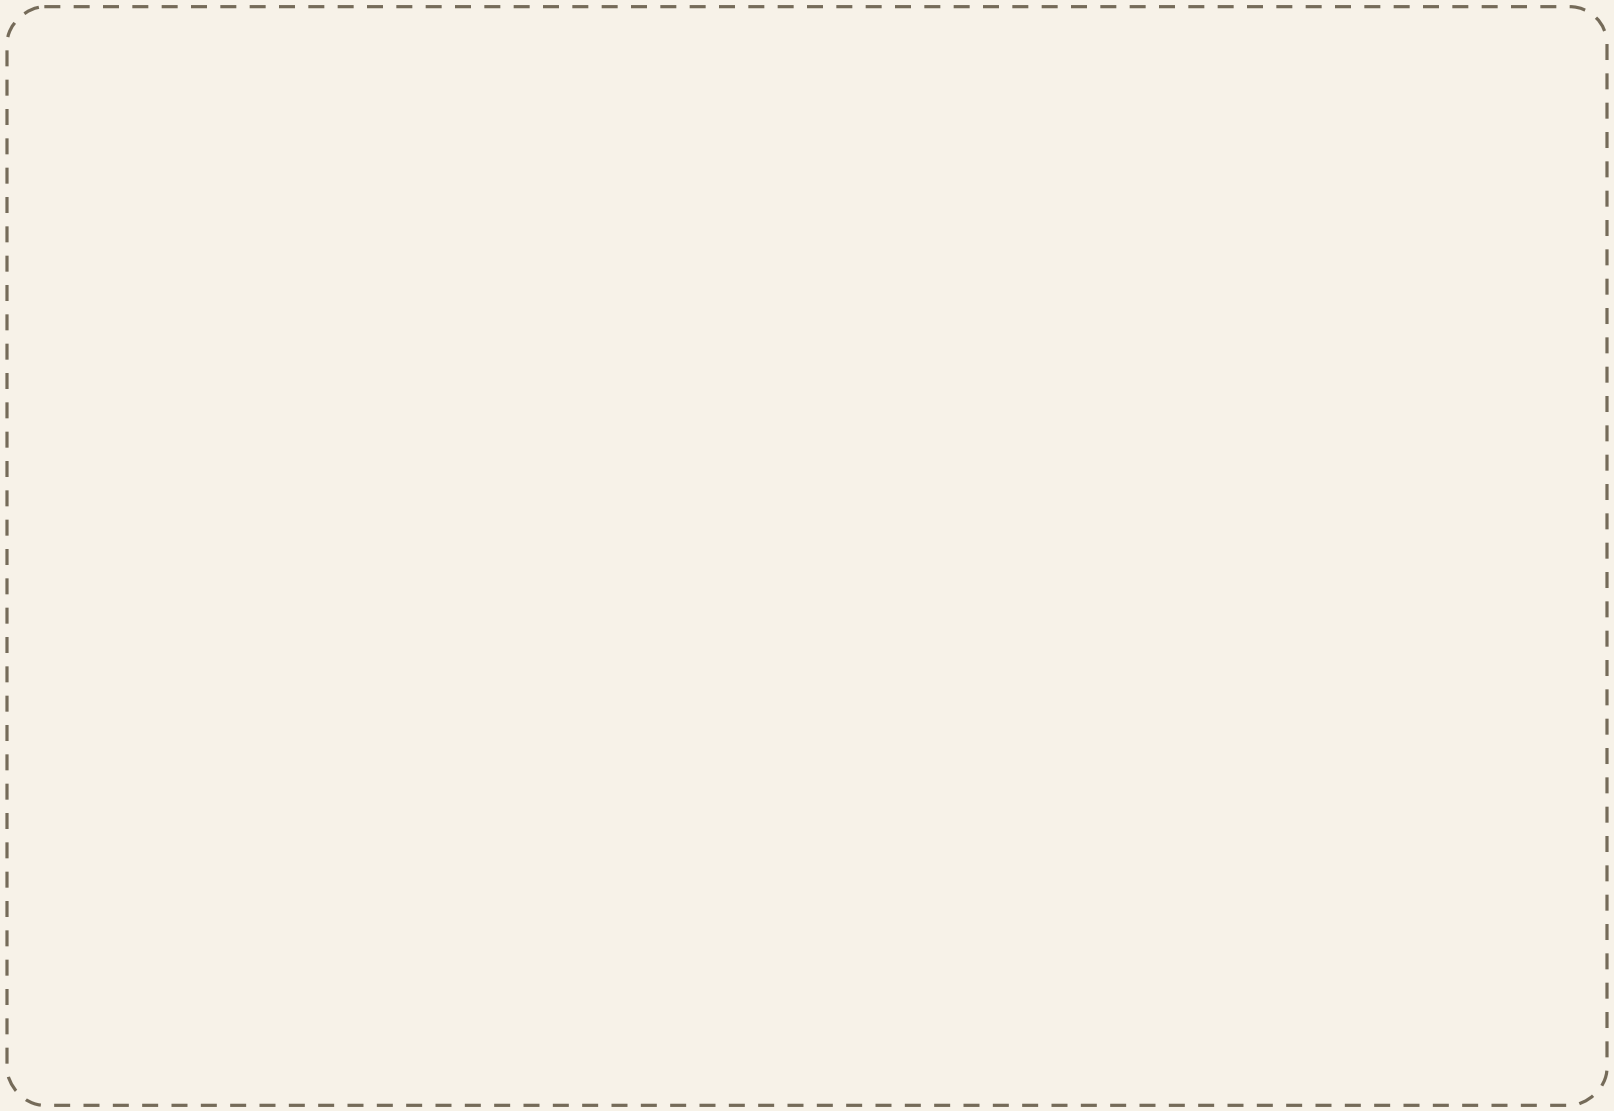

With a creak and a crash, the beanstalk tumbled down. The giant scrambled back into the clouds and was never seen again.

From then on, the little hen laid a golden egg every morning, and Jack and his mother were never hungry again. The End.

The End

Mattan, draw your favourite part of the story

This book was made for

Mattan

November 13, 2026

About Me

Mattan

AGE
6

FAVOURITE THINGS
Reading, Tv, Videogames

I like reading books and playing video games.

Starring Mattan as Jack